

Must-See Art Guide: London

This week's guide includes Marina Abramović, Kazimir Malevich, and others.

Alissa Darsa, August 7, 2014

This week's guide includes Marina Abramović, Kazimir Malevich, and others.

With a population of over 8 million, London has no shortage of cultural events to fill the dog days of summer. This week's featured shows include artists sure to satisfy even the savviest of art historians. From Kazimir Malevich's supremacist compositions to Marina Abramović's renowned performance pieces, these exhibitions excellently illustrate the most profound artistic evolutions that have taken place over the past 100-plus years, in particular the relationship between audience and artwork. With shows such as Slow Learner at Timothy Taylor Gallery and Ian Whittlesea: A Breathing Bulb at Marlborough Contemporary, viewers can experience two very different interpretations of Contemporary culture, before heading to Art Bermondsey for their London Life Competition, a window into life during the Art Deco period of the 1920s and 1930s. Gallery goers of all tastes will surely enjoy this visual trip through (art) history with some of the most exciting modern and contemporary artists London has to offer.

Exhibition: Go Figure

When: August 2–24, 2014

Where: The Cob Gallery, 205 Royal College Street London, NW1 0SG